'IN TIME OF PEACE'

"PREPAREDNESS" is by far the most vital problem before the American people today. The necessity for preparation for war is as urgent today as it was over a century ago when the Father of His Country advised his countrymen of the infant republic to look to their preparation for war in days of peace. It is the supreme lesson taught by Europe's war.

That the nation is beginning to recognize the problem and take the lesson to heart is shown by every test of public opinion throughout the States, whether made by the press or by public men. Luckily in spite of efforts to the contrary, there has been a positive refusal to regard the question of the nation's preparedness as in any sense partisan.

Men in and out of congress, of opposite political faiths, are beginning to "talk out in meeting" and to assert the right of Americans to look national dangers in the face and to know the truth about national defenses.

Several of the States have concluded that in its separate sovereignty each State faces the duty of complementing the scheme of national defense by the adoption of an intelligent military policy for the State. Through the efforts of the chambers of commerce of the larger cities of Massachusetts, the Massachusetts legislature has taken up the investigation of the relation of the State to the defense problem. On invitation of the Massachusetts legislature, Secretary of War Garrison will today address that body, using Washington's advice for his text.

Now, what is Hawaii going to do about this problem?

To point a moral from the military parade which passes through our streets today, let us remember that the total number of troops in column, platoon, or company is only half of the number of regular troops all those left behind at the posts, is but a little needed to defend Pearl Harbor and Honolulu.

Let us remember that since the carnival two years ago only six companies—six hundred soldiers—have arrived in the Islands, and since the last carnival but one company of Coast Artillery.

The war department is alive to the necessity of sending the eight or nine thousand troops still needed, but has not the troops to send.

Does Hawaii realize that with only the present garrison it is practically defenseless? That there might as well be no soldiers here as the few we have?

The Advertiser believes the time has come when Hawaii should speak up plainly for itself to the nation and tell of our relatively defenseless condition. The matter of defense means more than the protection of our country's shore line. It means the defense of our hearthstones in Hawaii nei.

In a recent address to the Ad Club, General Carter made a statement to the effect that there should be a battalion of the National Guard on each of the other islands, and that in case of war in the Pacific in which the United States should be involved, the services of every able bodied citizen male on Oahu will be needed.

Today, while we celebrate the anniversary of the birth of the Father of our Country, let us consider how we, as Americans, are preparing to safeguard those liberties which he won and which he left in our keeping.

Parliament Self Prolonging

THE elasticity of the British constitution is being shown strikingly in the suggestion now advanced in London that the parliament now in session enact legislation prolonging its life until the conclusion of the war. The only controversy likely to disturb the era of good feeling now existing between the government and the opposition will be the question of holding a general election, which, under the Parliamentary Act of 1911, is due this year. Under the former act a government which could hold its majority was entitled to retain office for seven years, but few survived that long and in lasting the five years now permitted by the new act the present government has come near establishing a record.

Since the present government came into power in 1910 it has lost seventeen seats, giving the Conservatives an actual majority over the Liberals, but the coalition of the latter with the Labor Party enables them to keep the reins. With the beginning of the war the two parties entered into an agreement whereby any vacancy occurring in the membership of the house of commons should be filled by a member of the same party as the retiring holder of the seat. Such a proceeding for a general election would make the proceeding a farcical and costly formality.

It is an open secret that the government does not desire a general election, not that any fear is expressed of defeat, but because it does not believe that anything in the nature of a domestic controversy should be allowed to interfere with the all absorbing task of defeating the Empire's foes. Thus far the opposition has showed a patriotism equal to that of the governing party and it is not believed that the responsible leaders of the party will permit this reputation to be jeopardized by the rash members, who might put the possible sweets of victory above everything else.

If a formal general election is held with the present members or men of the same party returned unopposed, it is likely that it will only be done under agreement with the opposition that a real contested election shall be held immediately after the war is over. But the most likely way out of the dilemma will be provided in all probability by a short act of parliament extending the life of the existing body until the war is over. There is no British constitution besides the acts of parliament and the power which under the act of 1911 provided for an existence of five years clearly has the right to extend this period.

As the law now stands, during the present year, to be more exact some time before next December, the first quinquennial parliament will come to an end unless it decrees its own further existence. Under ordinary conditions this election would probably be held early in the year as the Liberal party had practically finished its original program and would probably have been ready to go before the country on some new issues. But the war has changed everything and nothing more than parliament and party politics. Political strife is stilled, ancient battle cries are silenced and party spirit is in entire subjection. In the long history of British parliaments precedent for the proposed new lease of life will not be found lacking and in England precedent coupled with need provides an irresistible lever.

It is to be trusted that there is none of the Kalakia whitewash left over from the last session of the legislature for use at the Kupihea investigation. The man, by first handing over his young daughter for the lustful purposes of a

Injustice To Hawaiians

IN a recent issue of Christian Science Monitor appeared the following editorial:

"A protest in behalf of Hawaii and its people against misrepresentation, raised by the Maui News, a journal published in the archipelago, is entitled to considerate attention, and all the more so because it voices a sentiment that has been growing on the mainland of the United States, especially among those informed as to the facts, for the last several years, or, to be more exact, from the time when the first 'Hawaiian Village' was presented in this country on the 'Midway' of the world's fair at Chicago in 1893. An immediate cause for this protest is found in the sailing from the Islands of a party of Hawaiians, men and women, for San Diego, where they are under contract to appear in a similar 'attraction' of the exposition now in progress in that city. This party included a number of girls and a few adults. The former will 'do native dancing' mostly; the latter will weave mats. 'Of course,' says the newspaper named, 'the show will be of the same old misleading kind that has been carried over to the mainland times without number,' not a picture typical in any way of Hawaii as it is, but of what some imaginative showman would have it to be in order to 'make it a drawing card' in the amusement department of an exposition.

"It is too true, as the protest alleges, that in this and similar exhibits, preconceived erroneous notions of Hawaii are catered to. Ignorance confuses the Hawaiians with the inhabitants of very backward South Sea Islands, or with the lower tribes of the remoter islands of the Philippine group. People in the United States who have visited Hawaii, or who have met Hawaiians at home, would fail utterly to see in the so-called 'Hawaiian Village' any proper representation whatever of the real inhabitants of the Islands, their customs, habits or manners. That this misrepresentation is inexcusable, even from the business point of view of the showman, was illustrated in the Alaskan-Yukon exposition at Seattle in 1909, when thousands of people were attracted by the novelties presented in a building maintained on the grounds by Hawaiians in a perfectly dignified way. Distinguished visitors made this building a social center. Hawaiian girls and young men entertained all callers courteously and pleasingly. The whole affair reflected credit upon the exposition, and left a pleasant impression on all who profited by the opportunity of seeing something typical of the real Hawaii.

"In this connection it will not be out of place, we think, to mention the fact that score or more of native Hawaiian young men and women are in almost constant attendance at the schools and colleges in and around Boston. These students are gladly taken into the homes of private families of excellent standing, not only as boarders but frequently as guests. Some of them are active in neighborhood social affairs; all of them, it may be said, display the graces of character that go with good upbringing and a refining environment. The plea for common justice to the Hawaiian Americans should be heeded."

guest of the home, has since added to his offense by announcing that the girl was herself to blame and that he had already driven her—a fourteen-year-old girl—from his home. This after he had taken the girl from the Girls' Industrial School, where she was being safeguarded, on his promise as a father to look after her.

Banzai, Japanese!

IN the beautiful and satisfying lantern parade of Saturday evening, the Japanese of Honolulu have once more earned the thanks of the general community. That parade was an exhibition of the genuine patriotism of the Japanese of this city, if true patriotism is, as defined at the opera house last night by Doctor Scudder, the accomplishment of something at a personal sacrifice for the public good.

The white people of this city know what it is suitably to decorate an automobile for an effective appearance in a floral parade, know the thought, the trouble and the expense involved. Considerably more thought and trouble, if not expense, is involved in the preparation of such elaborate fire floats as rolled through the streets on Saturday night, and yet those responsible for these ask for nothing more from the rest of the population than the applause which greeted the appearance of their finished products.

In many instances, in Hawaii and on the mainland, the Japanese have been treated with scant courtesy, and there was something in reason back of the slight agitation among the members of the Japanese colony against Japanese participation in the carnival. Happily for all concerned, the Japanese rose superior to the voicings of what irritations may have come to them locally and contributed loyally and splendidly to the Carnival.

Banzai, Japanese!

Supervisors Should Move

IS IT not about time that the supervisors took a hand in regard to the conduct of Sheriff Rose, who appears to regard himself as above the law?

He, by his silence, approves of the announcement of his deputy that he will secure nolle prosequi dismissals of cases brought before the court in which these police officers are involved.

Now, his scandalously loose conduct in the cases of two persons charged with the offense of highway robbery, has had to be corrected by the order of Judge Ashford.

His lack of all action in the case of the police who looked on while the house of Mrs. Hampton was practically burglarized justifies his impeachment on the grounds of nonfeasance. His orders to his subordinates to drop the inquiry into the case of woman beating at Waikiki, a notorious case in which, after The Advertiser gave it publicity, the grand jury have found two true bills, furnish additional grounds for impeachment if more be needed.

Both Houses of Congress Are Occupied By Defenses

Argentine Republic, Brazil and Chile should be devised and carried out, with those four republics maintaining an international policing system in Mexico until peace is definitely re-established and the country has assurances of a settled, constitutional government.

PENSION BILL PASSED

The Pension Bill, carrying a total of $164,000,000, was passed in the senate. This total is $16,000,000 less than the total of the 1914 Pension Bill.

Before the house the Army Fortification Bill was passed, many speeches on the question of national defense being delivered. Representative Forney of Michigan predicted that with the rising expenditures and the falling revenues the administration would find itself so seriously embarrassed in 1916 that it would have to adopt either a policy of severe curtailment in expenditures to obviate a serious treasury deficit, or adopt some extreme measure for raising revenue.

TAXATION OF PROTECTION

The government next year will either have to enact a war tax bill for an advance of the present emergency tax measure and issue bonds in expectation of the war revenue, as in 1898, or reverse the policy of the Underwood tariff and enact a new tariff bill at greatly increased customs duties.

Representative Gardner made a severely caustic speech in regard to the delay in securing an adequate supply of ammunition for army use. At the present rate with which shells for the larger coast defense guns are being turned out, he said, it would take eight years to supply all the coast defense batteries with a sufficient supply to maintain one hour's engagement.
